Burks Presents at Third London Experimental Workshop

Stephen Burks, professor of economics and management, presented "Lab Measures of Other-Regarding Preferences can Predict Some Related on-the-Job Behavior: Evidence from a Large Scale Field Experiment" on Monday, November 16, at a session of the Third London Experimental Workshop at Middlesex University in London, United Kingdom. The talk discussed results from an analysis of one of the main behavioral economic field experiments of Morris's Truckers & Turnover Project, which has been underway since 2002. The work presented was jointly created by Burks, J. Anderson, professor of statistics, M. Bombyk '10, D. Ganzhorn '08, L. Götte, University of Bonn, and A. Rustichini, University of Minnesota, Twin Cities.
