Political Science Minor

Division of Social Sciences - Adm
Division of Social Sciences

- Requirements for this program are current for Spring 2008.
- Required credits in this minor: 20.

~~Objectives—Students in political science are able to critically analyze not only the behavior of political actors, but also their respective political institutions and political systems. Students learn to use strong analytical skills and critical thinking in their analysis of theories, institutions, and processes in political science.~~

Objectives—Political science is the study of the political world in a comprehensive sense, including the behaviors, organizations, institutions and philosophical foundations of political life from the level of individuals to the international setting in both contemporary and historical contexts. In addition, political science makes the connection between theory and practice at the ground level by preparing students for active lifelong participation and leadership in democratic society. The political science major curriculum stresses the development of strong analytical skills and critical thinking and prepares students for further academic training in political science, law, public administration and other graduate programs as well as for work in public affairs, business, journalism, interest groups and a wide range of other careers.

Students who complete the political science major are able to critically analyze and interpret political processes, problems and challenges; understand, synthesize and contribute imaginatively to the major research and theoretical debates prevalent in the study of American and comparative politics, international relations and political thought; present their evidence and arguments in clear, precise language; and participate thoughtfully, knowledgeably and ethically in civic life.
