however, was unsatisfactory in many instances; those given authority were often lacking in impartiality and administrative ability.

Today a nation would not undertake a major war without a comprehensive economic organization which would make possible the installation of immediate controls over production, trade, exchange, and fiscal and credit policies. Efforts are being made to keep inflation to a minimum in the present war. Even the average citizen is well-informed on the significance of fiscal and credit policies in the prevention of inflation. This is in sharp contrast to the situation in 1914-1918.
