MILTON PAUL GORDON
Westinghouse Science Talent Search Finalist

ABSTRACT

In the spring of 1947 the Senate Bill 5526 representing the second attempt at establishing a National Science Foundation was placed before Congress. This Foundation was to have had twenty-four members appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate. The Foundation was to have supported basic research in mathematical, physical, medical, and other sciences by means of loans and grants. The Foundation as proposed was divided into five divisions covering the major branches of natural science. The social sciences were not included. The Bill passed both the House and Senate, but it was vetoed by the President.
